BRITAIN MUST LET GERMANY CONTINUE TO TAKE OFFENSIVE

Passage of Lend-Lease Bill Done Much To Offset Bad Winter

BLDG. GREAT AIR FORCE

Tremendous Effort To Be Made By British To Gain Mastery of The Air

(Note: Despite all reports to the contrary, Great Britain must continue to allow Germany to take the offensive, Charles A. Smith, associate manager of the International News Service London bureau, reveals in the following article, third of a series of six on "The Truth About England.")

By Charles A. Smith
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK, Mar. 26—(INS)—Despite passage of the lend-lease bill and knowledge that it will accelerate the flow of arms from the United States to a state, sober British opinion is virtually unanimous in agreeing that for some time to come the initiative in World War II must continue to rest with Adolf Hitler.

The moral effect on Britain of the passing of the lend-lease legislation has been enormous and has done much to offset the bad winter and the depressing news of German depredations on British shipping in the Atlantic. But no one in possession of the full facts anticipates that Britain will immediately be able to switch from the defensive to the offensive in Europe.

It remains the opinion of well-informed Britishers that Britain will not embark on a continental land offensive.

Some Workers Return To Bethlehem Plant

BETHLEHEM, Mar. 26—By twos and tens, workers hurried or sidled into the Bethlehem steel plant without interference for two morning shifts today as State troopers maintained the order which has existed since early last night when they smashed a steel workers' organizing committee, CIO, picket line.

No exact estimate of the number of persons who returned to work was available. However, at least 500 went through the main gate on foot or in cars and another 200 to 500 were reported to have entered by other gates.

Organizing picketing was ended for the time being by the police action but small detachments of strikers occasionally passed the plant on the opposite side-walk, slowing to snail's pace to check on those entering.

After the State police smashed their lines, the strikers were told to cease picketing by SWOC Director Curtiss.

By 6 a. m., workers were beginning to arrive in small numbers for the 7 o'clock shift and from then until after 8 o'clock—there was another shift change at that time—they dribbled in.

Evidently anticipating possibility of another siege such as that of yesterday when passage in or out of the gates was blocked by strikers until arrival of State troopers, a truckload of food supplies was delivered to the plant this morning.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

While playing with a group of friends, Raymond Malachowski, Jr., 10, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Malachowski, Quakertown, was accidentally shot through the ankle on Sunday.

The incident occurred in the rear yard of the boy's home.

Pennsylvania Motor Police learned that Raymond's 19-year-old brother, Stanley, and Walter Swickla, 20, Philadelphia, had been shooting at tin cans near the Malachowski home. Raymond was picking up empty shells, when the .22-caliber rifle accidentally went off and the bullet entered the left ankle.

The rifle was owned by Walter Kendzior, 31, Philadelphia, who went to Quakertown with Swickla to spend the day with the Malachowskis.

SCHOOL DIRECTORS OUTLINE PROGRAM

To Discuss Trends In Taxation, Assessments and School Costs

TO MEET ON APRIL 10th

The annual spring meeting of the Bucks County School Directors' Association will be held in the County Court House, Doylestown, on Thursday, April 10th, according to Walter S. Miller, president of the County Board.

The major part of the meeting will be given over to a discussion on trends in taxation, assessment, state subsidies and educational costs in general.

The program will also provide for a thorough discussion of bills before the State Legislature. This presentation will be given by Dr. W. A. Roberts, immediate past president of the State School Directors' Association.

In view of the many important bills on education that have been introduced in the legislature, this session of the County School Directors' Association will be more important than any of those held in recent years.

Several important bills making mandatory the transportation of high school pupils, if passed are certain to affect more than 30 school districts of Bucks County. Of immediate interest to school board members is the proposed subsidy for high school tuition pupils.

Many bills have been introduced to change the minimum salaries of the fourth class district teachers and this will affect more than fifty school districts in Bucks County.

Music will be provided by the Doylestown High School Band under the direction of Earl J. Frick, music supervisor.

The following delegates to the State Convention are expected to make brief reports:

Robert Shaw, Solebury Township; Howard Kooker, Quakertown; Mrs. George Barber, New Britain Borough; Victor Pluck, Haycock Township; Albert Macklin, Bodminster Township.

The President, Walter S. Miller, will also call upon the following standing committees for their reports:

Opportunity for Boys To Enroll in CCC Now

During April, the Bucks County Board of Assistance with the co-operation of the State Employment Office expects to send a group of boys between the ages of 17 and 23 to Civilian Conservation Camps. These boys for the first time will be requested to register with the State Employment Office prior to enrollment. By so doing, their registration will continue on an active status during the time they remain in camp and will not expire in 60 days as is customary in routine registrations. An enrollee's record will be kept up to date by communications from camp and job opportunities will be forwarded to him while he is in camp. Arrangements have been made to provide enrollees of 38 Pennsylvania CCC Camps throughout the State with special defense industry training through co-operation with 25 high schools throughout the State. This program will provide selected enrollees a complete course of 120 hours of training while in camp in skills leading to employment in defense industry. In addition to this special training, there will continue the system of camp education which has been in effect for some time and has proved quite beneficial.

Here is a two-fold opportunity for ambitious boys who are not afraid of work and who are anxious to learn. Application may be made any morning at the Bucks County Board of Assistance, 10 W. Oakland avenue, Doylestown, and employment registrations may be made at the State Employment Office, 11 W. Oakland avenue, Doylestown.

Pennsylvania Motor Police asking that Elk lodges in Bucks County be on the lookout for a man giving his name as "Lee Bell", who has in his possession a paid up Elks' card from the Mount Vernon, Illinois, Lodge, who is calling on Elks and asking financial aid.

The man is about 55 years old, five feet two-or-three inches tall and weighs from 125 to 130 pounds. He carries a brief case.

This subject enters a lodge and shows this card and gives a tale of woe that he is a member in good standing and down and out and in need of some financial aid and usually obtains $2 or $3 from the members.

He hitchhikes.

A Handicapped Board

Washington, March 25. THERE are so many administrative boards and commissions here which either do not work at all or work very badly that it is not surprising when a new one is created by executive order, that there should be a certain amount of skepticism as to its effectiveness among the less glibly observers of the Washington scene.

IT, of course, is too early to forecast futility for the new Mediation Board of eleven which the President has named to deal with the grave problems created by the wave of strikes which exist, and are threatened, in plants which

NEARLY 40 TO TAKE PART IN PROGRAM

Fathers' Varieties To Be Presented in H. S. Auditorium On Friday Evening

MUCH GOOD TALENT

Thirty to forty individuals are ready to perform on Friday evening, when the Fathers Varieties are presented in Bristol high school auditorium.

The Fathers' Association is the sponsoring unit, and this group of men has during the past few weeks been conducting auditions, in order to present to Bristol residents and those from the surrounding communities some excellent local talent. The result has been surprising to the judges, who found it difficult to select from approximately 100 talented folks a smaller group to make a well-rounded program. Such excellent talent was located that it was a task to decide to eliminate, the judges state.

The result of the auditions has brought forth a fine program, the numbers of which will be:

Lucille Kline, vocal solo, "God Bless America"; Herbert Yates and Holman Fite, string duet, "Only Want a Buddy Not a Sweetheart"; Laura Pierandozzi, tap dance; Patricia Coyne, tap dance; Leo Johnson, reading, "I Had But 50c"; Theresa Brescia, vocal solo, "Woodpecker Song"; Harry Swank, harmonica solo, "Danny Boy"; Jane Argus and Anita Embessi, vocal, "Hemlock Tree"; Jerry Kempton, acrobatic dancing; patrol boys, hat steth, chorus, "I Am An American"; Peggy Fallon, vocal solo, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen"; Wilbur Stead.

Plea Made for Personal Kits To Be Sent Abroad

Word has been received of the need for women's personal kits by American Red Cross, Southeastern Chapter, 511 North Broad street, Philadelphia. In October an appeal was made, and some Bristol women, members of Red Cross, responded generously. Again, the call is made to help again the women of England, who are suffering.

These kits contain the everyday necessities of women, and Bristol people are asked either to make, or order, the same from local headquarters, 120 Mill street. For $1 a kit made and filled will be sent abroad.

Several hundred garments have been sent to Bristol recently, and those who can sew are asked to either go to headquarters and receive garments to be made at home or to spend an hour or two sewing at the headquarters.

The women of Bristol have been doing valiant work for those suffering from the effect of war, and are asked to continue their excellent activity.

BOY, 13, DIES OF INJURIES SUSTAINED WHEN PINNED BENEATH CHUNK OF COLLAPSING WALL; GIRL, 13, INJURED

Angelo DiVenti Victim of Accident As He Romps and Plays On Bank of Adams Hollow Creek—Viola Terrano Has Possible Fracture of Right Leg and Incised Wound of Lower Right Leg

A 13-year-old boy lies dead and a girl playmate of the same age is in the hospital with severe injuries as the result of being pinned under a portion of a wall which collapsed yesterday afternoon. The two children were playing on the banks of Adams Hollow Creek, near the "dead-end" of a small street running parallel with Lincoln avenue, and extending from Cherry street to the Creek.

The boy fatally hurt was Angelo DiVenti, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carmelo DiVenti, 358 Lafayette street. The lad died about two hours after being admitted to the Harriman Hospital. He had sustained compound fracture of right leg and severe bruises and cuts of left leg.

According to Dr. Charles F. Sampsel, deputy coroner of Bucks county, who was called in the case, death was due to shock resulting from injuries sustained.

The girl is Viola Terrano, 319 Lincoln avenue. It was stated at Harriman Hospital this morning that the girl passed a good night, and that her condition was "fairly good" this morning. She has a possible fracture of the right leg; incised wound of lower right leg requiring 18 stitches, and abrasions of the right leg.

The two children, as near as the story can be learned, were playing with others, along the banks of the creek, which is the habit of children of the neighborhood to do, during the noon school recess.

The wall is reported to have just dropped onto the children without giving any warning, and the DiVenti boy and the Terrano girl were caught. The piece of the wall which fell measured 14 inches thick, five feet and seven inches wide, and 10 feet and four inches long.

On this auspicious occasion, a short parade will precede the program, with the American Legion Cadet drum and bugle corps leaving the Bracken Post home at 7.30, marching up Radcliffe street to Lincoln avenue to Wood street, to Sons of Italy hall. There they will be met by Judge Alessandrini and members of the Sons of Italy, who will be guests of Mutual Aid Society for the occasion. The entire line of marchers will then continue to Mutual Aid hall for the ceremony. The program is scheduled for eight o'clock.

The presiding officer will be Jacob C. Schmidt, Jr., past commander of the ninth district, American Legion, and chairman of the flag presentation committee.

MEETING TONIGHT

A meeting of the Woman's Society for Christian Service is scheduled for this evening at eight o'clock, in Bristol Methodist Church.

Classified Ads deliver the goods.

As soon as the accident happened, the other children in the group ran screaming for help. Sabatino Caucei, 327 Lincoln avenue, who was nearby, was informed of the tragedy by his nephew. Caucei ran to the spot, as did others, and Caucei grabbed a piece of timber and tried to pry up the heavy slab from off the children. He could not raise the wall alone, but others came to his assistance and in this manner got the children loose.

The wall, say those who reached the scene before the children had been extricated, was lying on both of DiVenti's legs and a portion of his abdomen, while the right leg of the Terrano girl was caught beneath the heavy mass of stone and cement, apparently as she had attempted to run out from beneath the falling mass.

Both children were taken to Harriman Hospital.

The boy and the girl both attended the Jefferson avenue public school. The boy was in the fifth grade and the girl is in the same grade. DiVenti was a twin and is survived by his parents, brother Frank, and twin-sister Mary.

Lena Terrano, sister of the injured girl, was one of the group playing at the spot when the accident occurred, but was a short distance away from her sister. Both the father and mother are employed, the former working at Langhorne and the latter in Trenton.

Many of the mothers in the neighborhood, as well as others, were attracted to the scene, knowing that an accident had occurred and thinking that perhaps their children were the victims. Someone reported that other children were caught beneath the heavy stone mass, and firemen and borough employees were called. The stone wall was broken apart and a search made, but it was found that only the two had been injured.

The spot where the accident occurred.

GOING WITHOUT THINGS

Youth is dazzled by the glitter of modern life. Youth sees the fast spinning and smooth purring automobiles, and it longs for them with an unquenchable desire.

The youth of a certain type feels he must shine in the eyes of the girl friend. He wants to impress her with his power and daring. He sees the shiny automobile standing in the street. He probably has no intention of stealing it for money, but he thinks a little joy ride will not hurt it or its owner. So he takes the car, has a night of glory, and for the moment his desire is satisfied.

Those desires do not remain satisfied long. There are dance halls to be enjoyed, gambling devices at which he longs to test his luck. Money must be had. Many American youths would rather be dead than be without it.

The youth of a generation ago was keen for money, but the need for it did not seem so urgent. The idea of hiring a horse and taking a slow ride around the country might have been pleasing. But it was not so fascinating that the boy could not get along without it. Many boys were content just to stand on the curb then, spit in the gutter, and exchange racy stories. It was not an elevating life, but it did not cost much, and did not create that intense desire for money that exists now.

It is one of the essentials of life to learn how to get along without the things that are beyond reach. The way to learn that is to find how many good things are within reach. The boy who can play a star game of baseball, and is the hero of his school team, for instance, is happier than the one with a purse full of money. Turn the boy's mind to the things he can reach and show him what a good time he can have getting them, and his future will be safe.

BRITISH SHIPPING

It is as hard to state briefly the condition of the British merchant marine as it is to report that of a person who has been injured. Even when the diagnostician knows exactly what has happened and has measured the patient's reserve power, it is not easy to put it into words. All readers are familiar with such expressions as "his condition is critical but not grave."

It has its match in the official British statement that marines losses are viewed with "anxiety tempered with confidence." What that means depends upon who is reading it. It is therefore gratifying that Prime Minister Churchill is sending the parliamentary secretary of the ministry of shipping to this country to provide the details upon which part of the American aid program can be formulated.

It was said in the Churchill statement that "in no sphere of our war effort is the help which the United States can give us under the lend lease legislation more urgent than that of shipping." War materials and foodstuffs on American docks will not help Britain. It is not clear what the United States is expected to do, or can do, but it is time that it got a detailed picture of the British shipping problem.

Uncle Sam's budgeted commitments for preparedness and aid are now $39,000,000,000. That many iron men ought to be indomitable.

Plaid Suit Is Indispensable for Spring—headline. That makes two kinds of indispensable checks.

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

Shady's pawing hand raked across the Tanya's transom without finding a grip, and the canoe impelled by the thrust, shot out into clear view, its gunwales almost dipping water with the big fellow's struggles to right himself.

"Ride him, cowboy!" Chris jeered through cupped hands. Then, as Shady by some miracle managed to drag himself upright without capsize, Chris bellowed the supreme insult of the sea, "Get a horse, you farmer!"

Shady flashed a sickly grin toward the laughing faces on the wharf, and set a wobbling return course to the Baltic.

Sondra wiped her eyes, and turned to the still chuckling Chris. "Tell us about the herring, skipper. Will they be—"

"Chris Sandvik! Ye hidebound son of a limpet! Are ye stranded there? Lay aft!" That stentorian voice turned every eye upward toward Echo House where Captain O'Moore, bareheaded but fully dressed, leaned from an upstairs window.

Sondra felt a twinge of conscience. He had not gone to bed in her absence, though he himself would never admit feeling any anxiety about her.

Chris grinned. "Guess I'd better beat it up there, or the Old Man'll be pinning my ears to the mainmast."

The three sprinted across the causeway, hearing the engines of the O'Moore trawlers exploding into life, and the winches clanking up their heavy anchor chains.

They found Captain O'Moore in his big chair in the upstairs sitting room, a blue fire of eagerness in his eyes. As Sondra ran to him he flashed her a smile, and drew her down to the chair-arm beside him. But his first words were for Chris: "Ye found the fish, lad. Where?"

"Shelkoff Bay, Cap'n. Slathers of 'em—milling up toward the mouth of Shaman's Lagoon!"

"They'll not have worked inside before the fleet gets out!"

"Nah! Not for another twelve hours, anyhow. There were no whales or anything around to disturb 'em. Katiann and old Ish were scouting around the edges with the Seando, but it's too rough in Shelkoff for the rest of that cracker-box fleet."

"What's that?" A wariness dropped suddenly over the Captain's lively interest. "You say there are Indian boats in Shelkoff?"

"Yeah. The whole armada is holed-up in the Lagoon. Must have some screwy idea of trying to fish inside there, though even a Siwash ought to know it can't be done."

"I . . . wonder," O'Moore's eyes took on a faraway look, his fingers drummed thoughtfully against the chair arm. "With shallow boats and shallow nets, it might be done—if one knew the currents and the bottom, as old Ish does. . . . Let a big school once get inside there, . . . our boats can't even enter that lagoon, much less fish it. . . . By the livin', horn-billed jeezax!" he concluded, explosively, "we've been near to missin' a trick, me lad!"

He took his arm from around Sondra's waist and leaned forward, beating a fist into his palm as he snapped his orders. "Get ye out there with the fleet, me bucko. Fill the holds and the decks. Then cut in all your underwater exhausts, and scatter that school from Shelkoff to Borneo! And look to it that no other school gets inside Shaman's Lagoon this season."

"But, Dynamite! Why scatter the—"

"Belay, gurl! This is man's business." The Captain's steely eyes switched back to Chris. "Ready to shove off, Skipper?"

"All set, Cap'n—and so are the others, as you can see."

They all turned to the window, through which came the accelerated foundation. It cannot get into the picture at all until the Secretary of Labor has "certified" a strike to it as beyond the department's ability to adjust and as interfering with defense production.

MISS FRANCES PERKINS, Secretary of Labor, would have to do the certifying. So far as recorded, Miss Perkins has never reached the point where she thought the sit-down or any other form of strike was reprehensible. Her sympathies are definitely pro-union, and naturally she would exhaust every effort to settle strikes through her own department's conciliation agency before calling on an outside board. The new setup is such that to call it into action would be a confession of failure upon the part of the Labor Department. In brief, Miss Perkins, naturally, will call on the Mediation Board only as a last resort, and, until she calls, it has nothing to do and can do nothing.

THUS, it can be seen, the new board not only is not in position to avert strikes from being called but strikes may easily run on for weeks, as they are doing now, without the board being able to do anything about them. The "cooling-off period" advocated by Mr. Knudsen is entirely ignored in the new arrangement. Mr. Knudsen's idea was for legislation that would fix a period of thirty or forty days after a strike was ordered before it became effective and work was stopped. This would give opportunity for reflection, negotiation and compromise. It seemed a sensible idea, but it has no place in the President's plan. Under it, there is nothing more to prevent strikes now than there was before he announced it.

ALL he has done is to appoint a board which, after a strike is on and the Department of Labor finds itself unable to settle, can be called in to try its hand. That really is all the Mediation Board amounts to. It was highly commended because of the character of its members and as a step in the right direction. And when it is considered that only a few weeks ago Mr. Roosevelt dismissed all these strikes with which the defense plants are afflicted as trivial and accused the newspapers of exaggerating them, it is a step in the right direction. But it isn't a very great step, because, like the OPM, he has not delegated to it real power.

ON the contrary, he has deliberately handcuffed his board by making it impossible for it to move until Miss Perkins "certifies" a case to it. And even then he has not helped make the board effective by loading it on the side of labor. The four employers supposedly balance the four labor leaders, but the fact that of the three members named to represent the public two are distinctly New Dealish, and inclined always to take the New Deal view, tips the scales on the labor side. Altogether, if the Mediation Board can rise above its handicaps and straighten out this strike situation, it will be proof of genius somewhere in its membership. There is an opportunity for it now in the Bethlehem Steel strike—and in the nineteen other strikes now retarding defense work.

FASHION PARADE

By Orry-Kelly

Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service

HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—There is a silhouette for every being on the distaff side this exciting season. Hollywood designers never connive on fashions. Each one does the things that will make the star he is dressing look most beautiful. As a consequence the feminine world gets long waists, long and short ones, full skirts and slim ones, short skirts and long ones, hats as flat as a pancake or those that tower fourteen inches skyward—all in a single season.

Two of the loveliest dresses worn in "Kisses for Breakfast" are so different one can hardly conceive them both in the same century. Jane Wyatt wears a

Howard Shoup designed gown of two shades of light weight silk crepe in the latest draped silhouette. An overskirt in fuchsia forms the front of the bodice and part of the skirt. This drapes over royal blue which forms the back of the bodice and the sleeves. A gargantuan jeweled spray is clipped at the extreme neckline. Shirley Ross wears a bouffant of entirely different line showing a white organza skirt and top with of any magnitude until she has obtained, by her own efforts and with increased American aid, an overwhelmingly superior air force.

The remainder of 1941 is more likely to witness a tremendous British effort to obtain command in the air, to strangle the menace now being directed against her Atlantic life-line, and to build up her army for service overseas at some time in the future. Land operations on the scale of 1914-1918 be disposed in Western Europe, between 50 and 60 divisions facing Russia in Poland and East Russia, and about 20 divisions in Rumania and Bulgaria. Forty divisions were estimated to be on the Rhine and approximately 35 to 40 divisions in occupied France. Estimates of the number of German troops in Italian Tripolitania ranged from 100,000 to 150,000.

With the knowledge that both sides are placing large and ever-increasing forces in the field, the opinion is growing that the end must be based on the gradual weakening of one of the belligerents and not on some swift political ending. Few Britishers now think in terms of a German internal collapse.

The view is officially expressed in London that Germany must and will make an all out effort this year to subdue Britain or at least obtain a military decision before British rearmament is advanced much further and the flow of aid from America turns to a flood.

German strategy, it is felt, contains the following program for this year: An all-out campaign against the British Atlantic life-line in an attempt to stifle American aid.

An attempt to close the eastern end of the Mediterranean by an advance through the Balkans, followed by an attack on Suez from the air.

An effort to seize Tunisia, block the Sicilian channel, and cut the Mediterranean in half.

An attack on Gibraltar to slam the Atlantic gate to the Mediterranean and disperse the British fleet either into the Atlantic or eastward toward Malta or Alexandria.

Invasion of Britain, providing the opportunity is offered.

Britain is well aware of all these possibilities and has taken every precaution to meet and counter—and in some cases to forestall—each one of them.
